Judge Allen's Judicial Leadership

From 1999 to 2003, Judge Allen served as Supervising Judge of the Juvenile Division of the Allegheny County Court of Common Pleas. During this time, Judge Allen initiated and implemented changes which positively impacted both juveniles and taxpayers.

For example, Shuman Detention Center suffered from overcrowding and Allegheny County officials were contemplating a costly expansion in order to ameliorate the problem. Judge Allen was instrumental at this time in the creation of diversion programs for youth ages 10-14, in which the juveniles were housed in their residences rather than Shuman Detention Center. The diversion program was implemented city-wide through the Youth Enrichment Services (YES) program, and county-wide through the Rankin Christian Center. In addition, Judge Allen advocated for the increase in electric home monitoring of juveniles. Perhaps most significantly, Judge Allen increased the frequency of detention hearings from every other day to daily, so that juveniles did not languish in Shuman Detention Center, or in some cases, the Allegheny County Jail. While keeping more children out of Shuman Detention Center, Judge Allen also ceased the policy of using the Allegheny County Jail to accommodate the excess capacity of Shuman Detention Center. Judge Allen's reforms alleviated the overcapacity burden on Shuman Detention Center, so that expansion was unnecessary and Allegheny County – and its taxpayers – saved millions of dollars.

Judge Allen also made a positive and permanent impact on the education of juveniles who were adjudicated delinquent in Allegheny County by initiating the The Academy alternative summer school program, which ultimately became The Academy Charter School. The Academy was established as an alternative to the out-of-county residential and educational placement of Pittsburgh's court-adjudicated male and female youth. This program was created to address the educational needs of the juveniles who were truant, suspended, tardy for class, or who were presenting disruptive behavior in school. Some of these students had not been in school for more than a year and had "fallen off the radar" of the educational system. With the implementation of The Academy program, these students often experienced a successful return to the classroom. The Academy program often resulted in improved attendance and grades, which was a significant achievement for these "forgotten" students. The success of the Academy program was evidenced in 2003 when it was granted charter school status within the Pittsburgh Public Schools.
