No. 10 (a)

Over the first ten years of my career in the Pennsylvania Senate, I was principally responsible for drafting and negotiating a wide variety of bills. I developed the technical skill of drafting laws that is a difficult and time intensive labor. Often these legislative drafting assignments required extensive negotiation among outside interest groups, members of the General Assembly, and representatives of the Governor. One day's work may be a high profile property tax bill and the next day may require technical drafting for a tobacco settlement implementation bill. During this part of my career, I aided in the drafting of hundreds of laws, many of which are still statutory law to this day.

About 15 years ago, while I continued to work on legislative drafting, I also started to focus on Senate litigation matters, both civil and criminal. The President Pro Tempore of the Senate is the highest ranking senator in the Commonwealth and therefore the most sensitive and difficult issues often make their way through the office; and in litigation, he is often a named party. At times, the President Pro Tempore or other members of the Senate also initiate litigation.

The volume of litigation and the amount of legal issues in the Pennsylvania Senate has significantly increased over the past 10 years. Interested parties who believe to be aggrieved by an Act signed by the Governor often turn to the courts, raising procedural or constitutional concerns in an attempt to overturn the law. These issues were often filed in state court, Commonwealth or Supreme, but others were filed in federal court.

Criminal investigations also increased over the past ten to twelve years. Search warrants needed to be responded to, grand jury testimony needed to be prepared and subpoenas sometimes required extensive hours to answer. It was my responsibility as the top lawyer in the Senate to address all of these issues.

In my last five or so years in the Senate, my responsibilities also included all sensitive personnel matters and the litigation in state and/or federal courts that followed.
Further, for more than 10 years, I had been one of a very few staffers who had negotiated the state budget. This annual 60 billion dollar legislative endeavor and sometime judicially challenged enterprise required a significant amount of time and energy. This process gave me true depth on legislative, executive and judicial law as it related to spending authorization.

The breadth of my knowledge both from a technical law perspective as well as a litigation perspective is difficult to capture in words. On average, the Pennsylvania Senate had in excess of 20 or so active cases in different stages of litigation in a variety of courts. Further, and although at the close of my career in the Senate, I did not draft as much legislation as I used to, most staffers, including many Senate lawyers, reported to and constantly consulted for legal and legislative advice.

I have been known to say that I was the last train car on the Senate tracks. When the problem, be it legislative or legal, was particularly dire or difficult, I was generally consulted for help and advice. Such advice generally turned into management. I did not have the luxury of turning the most difficult cases over to someone else. They were mine to deal with and ultimately resolve. On occasion, these cases also had ethical aspects which I was readily called on to advise.

As the highest ranking lawyer in the Senate and in many ways the highest ranking Republican staffer as well, I was ultimately responsible for guiding and directing a Senate staff of hundreds. In addition, I was also often the point person to engage the media in the public communications that went along with significant legal issues in the state Senate.

Senators who I represented occasionally had disputes with agencies over statutory and regulatory interpretations and decisions. Some of these disputes were litigated. Most of my legal work in the Senate dealing with agencies was working with agency counsel developing statutory language for bills/acts. I did extensive work with the following departments: Revenue, PUC, Insurance, Turnpike, Health, Human Services, DCED and others.

The Senate of Pennsylvania had dozens of cases which I was principally responsible for in front of the Commonwealth Court (original jurisdiction) and the Pennsylvania Supreme Court. A large percentage of the litigation I worked on was in front of those two Courts (approximately 70%). Twenty percent of the litigation I directed was in Federal Court and ten percent in courts of common pleas.

I have never testified before a grand jury but have assisted dozens of members and employees who have. I have been responsible to obtain thousands of documents requested through search warrants or subpoenas by all levels of law enforcement.

Named Distinguished Alumni of Phil-Mont Christian Academy in 2017. Also named Alumni of the year at Phil-Mont in 2020.

In May 2016, named one of the 10 Titans in Pennsylvania. A lengthy profile was included in the City and State magazine calling Crompton "The Consigliere".

In 2012, listed as one of Harrisburg's Smartest Staffers by PoliticsPA: "Meet the man behind the sweeping Marcellus shale law. Crompton is one of the key staffers in the caucus who also knows health care and tax policy in and out. A Dickinson grad, he's bright and very focused- probably why he was among the most-nominated people for this list. He also has a reputation as the brightest attorney in the room when dealing with outside counsel."

Over the past ten years, profiled on several occasions by PennLive as one of the finest lawyers in the Capitol.

In 2004, the Insider wrote that Crompton "was the legal brain" of Senator Jubelirer and was called the next generation to legend Steve MacNett and was cited for helping to restore lobbying disclosure that was initially overturned by the Courts.

In 2003, named as one of the best attorneys in the state Capitol by the PA Report in the Power 75 list.

In 2002, named by Politics PA as a "Rising Star" in Pennsylvania.

I have worked in the public arena for over two dozen years. In the Senate, I was the lead lawyer on hundreds of legal and legislative issues. I have also often wrangled with the press, a healthy adversarial relationship. All said, I know of no unfavorable information which should impair my positive PBA rating. However, if one is looking for public information critical of me or the Senate of Pennsylvania that I proudly represented, he or she will be able to find such.

During 2020, I have authored over 70 published and unpublished opinions. I believe my opinions are well-sourced, straightforward and objective. When reviewed, I believe these opinions are the best evidence of my acumen as a judge. Also, perhaps due to my training in the state senate, I am calm and focused during difficult situations. I believe my balanced temperament is founded on the principle that all individuals deserve respect and that we are all equal. No one should use power over anyone. Further, I enjoy problem solving and working with others with different perspectives and therefore I have fully embraced collaborating with my colleagues on the Court. Finally, in light of drafting hundreds of laws as Counsel to the Senate republicans, I believe my expertise in statutory development and construction aids the Commonwealth Court when confronted with a statute or regulatory interpretation.
